

Gray Wolves' can naturally adapt to a wide variety of places, from North America to Europe.

They are known for their intimidating howl that is so easily identified.

This ice-age survivor is the eldest relative to the domestic dog.

Rarely attacking humans, wolves' are given a bad reputation for being vicious killers. When in fact, they are skilled hunters after their natural prey.

Gray wolves' are hunted by humans for their luxurious coats and because of the fear of the wolf attacking livestock.

With more funding, there can be better laws to protect these gorgeous animals from being murdered and come up with solutions for protecting livestock and wolves' their habitat back!

You may be thinking what does this have to do with me... Aren't endangered species already protected?

Reintroduction programs in Montana and Idaho, the federal government has given permits to ranchers that enable the ranchers to kill wolves that attack livestock.

PLEASE DONATE TO STOP THE KILLING OF WOLVES.
